SAYONARA

When Masaka Ogata boards the airplane back to Japan the end of this month, she will carry with her many memories of Tuscaloosa and Shelton State Community College. During graduation services, she received an associate in arts degree with a major in music from the college. Mrs. Ogata, a student of Syble Coats, held her own recital this spring and was the pianist for Shelton's Honor's Night program.

She and her husband, JVC executive Katsunori Ogata, came to Tuscaloosa from California three years ago with their two children after spending one year in Orange County, California. Last year Mr. Ogata had to return to Japan. However, Mrs. Ogata stayed in Tuscaloosa so that her son, Hiroshi, could graduate from Tuscaloosa County High School. Hiroshi is studying to be a musician and was selected a first year All-State trumpet player this year.

Mrs. Ogata has enjoyed Tuscaloosa and her time at Shelton State. "The teachers are so warm at Shelton State, especially the music instructors," she says. "In class, I was definitely different. I was older, Japanese, and spoke poor English. Yet, I never felt different. All of the students were so nice. David Sandy is also a great person and helped me so much."

"Yokohama, Japan, has a population of five million people. We don't drive automobiles like the people in Tuscaloosa do. We walk where we want to go. In America, you walk for exercise. In Japan, we walk in order to get to our destination," she says.

"There are so many beautiful homes in Tuscaloosa," Mrs. Ogata continues. "I love all the antiques in the homes here."

The Ogata family spent six years in Australia, and their son was born there. Mrs. Ogata found it to be a very interesting experience, so interesting that she wrote a book about parenting in Australia and how it differs from customs in Japan. HOW TO RAISE CHILDREN THE AUSTRALIAN WAY is very humorous, and, according to Mrs. Ogata, it was published by a well-known Japanese publishing house. Mrs. Ogata admits she is anxious to return to Japan and her husband now that her son has finished high school. So, we at Shelton State say "Sayonara" to the Ogata family.
